

The Languages of Limited Diffusion Work Group, part of the Home for Trainers project of the STC has been working on finding resources and ways to share those resources. To view the database go to <http://www.ncihc.org/languages-of-limited-diffusion>. The LLD Work Group will also present a review of one resource through the ListServ about once every three months. We know that not all of the ListServ readers will be interested in every resource, so please don't respond; just, delete the information that doesn't interest you.

If you have resources you would like to add to the database, and/or if you would like review a resource, please contact us at lld@ncihc.org.

Title:	English to Nepali Medical Dictionary
Type of Resource:	Available on the Medchrome Website
Last accessed:	11/27/2018
Reviewer:	Rosanna Balistreri, MA, Rosanna@reach-diversity.com
Language:	English & Nepali

The Medchrome website is designed to provide general information to readers and academic students. It is not intended for medical advice, diagnosis or treatment.

The website is rich with information from Asian countries such as India and Nepal on a vast array of topics ranging from a list blood banks and contact information to cost of admission in medical colleges in Nepal.

Among the valuable articles and material made available on the Medchrome website we find an English/Nepali Medical Dictionary created by a Nepali-speaking medical intern. The dictionary is organized in 5 sections in alphabetical order:

- Section A lists pathological processes and terms;
 - Section B lists terms related with anatomical structures;
 - Section C lists physiological terms;
-

- Section D lists diseases and conditions by body systems;
- Section E lists treatment modalities.